The Bulletin of Tibetology seeks to serve the specialist as well as the general reader with an interest in this field of study. The motif portraying the Stupa on the mountaintop suggests the dimensions of the field.

EDITORS
Acharya Samten Gyatso
Dr. Rigzin Ngodup
Thupten Tenzing

Contributing Editor: Pema Wangchuk
Price per copy: Rs. 40/-

1998

Published by:
The Director:
Namgyal Institute of Tibetology
Gangtok, Sikkim - 737 101

Printed by:
Media Trans Himalaya (Sikkim) Pvt. Ltd.,
31 A National Highway (Below High Court)
Gangtok, Sikkim - 737 101 Ph: 29293
CONTENTS

1. Humanism in Buddhism
   by Dr. Aswani Kumar

2. Sikkim: The Hidden Holy Land and its Sacred Lakes
   by Dr. Chawang Acharya &
   Acharya Svenam Gyatso Dolkham

3. Analysis of Tantrayana (Vajrayana)
   by Prof. P.G. Yogi

4. Notes and Topics:
   Acharya Svenam Gyatso Dolkham

CONTRIBUTORS IN THIS ISSUE

Dr. Aswani Kumar: Lecturer, Govt. Senior Secondary School, Portmore, Sikkim

Dr. Chawang Acharya: Obtained Acharaya degree from Central Institute of Higher Tibetan Studies, Varanasi and Ph.D. from Sarnath, Sikkim. He is presently working as Senior Lecturer, Sikkim Institute of Higher Tibetan Studies (SIHT), Govt. of Sikkim, Gangtok.

Acharya Svenam Gyatso Dolkham: Obtained Acharaya degree from Sampranand Sanskrit Vishwavidyalaya, Varanasi and is presently working as Asst. Director, Namgyal Institute of Tibetology on deputation from the Govt. of Sikkim.

Prof. Parameshwar Giri Yogi: Senior Lecturer of Sanskrit and Pali Buddhism in Sikkim Institute of Higher Tibetan Studies, Gangtok. He is a scholar of Sanskrit and Pali Buddhism from Sampurnanand Sanskrit Vishwavidyalaya, Varanasi.

Views expressed in the Bulletin of Tibetology are those of the contributors and not those of the Namgyal Institute of Tibetology. An article represents the personal and individual views of the author and does not reflect any official or institutional views with which the author may be associated. The Editors are the publishers of the article(s). Copyright of articles belongs to the author, unless otherwise indicated.
Humanism in Buddhism

Dr. Ashwani Kumar

Humanism is a much used word these days. In fact, the term has gained so much popularity in recent times that every theory and every institution now claims to have a humanistic outlook. It is thus said that no one, despite their vehement announcements of a humanistic approach, has ever made a conscious effort to clarify or understand the meaning of the term. Compounding the problem further is the confusion and apparent crisis that humanity is passing through at present. Man stands at the crossroads; ahead lie the hopes and aspirations of the 21st century and behind are the failures of the past. Humanism, as per the Webster’s New International Dictionary, is defined as, "A contemporary cult or belief calling itself religious but substituting faith in man for faith in God". C. F. Potter adds more to this definition and explains humanism as the faith in the supreme value of self-perfectibility of human personality. But, despite all this rhetoric, humanism cannot be defined through any single theory or hypothesis and it also does not swell on new facts. Humanism broadly indicates a shifting of focus from supernaturalism to naturalism, from transcendental to the existing, from absolute reality to the living reality. Humanism is the term for those aspirations, activities and attainments through which natural man puts on "super-nature".

Humanism, per se, is not a new trend. Its roots can be traced to the philosophical traditions of India, China, Greece and Rome. The most effective expression of this hope can be found in the Vedas, where man is described as the "Child of Immortality" (Jánmāyā Parāth). The Mahabharata contends that there is nothing superior to man. Service to man is service to God, it says. Buddhism, especially in its early stages, propagated a form of radical humanism. It emphasized that each man must seek his own truth and that there were no permanent divine orders to help one in this search. In India, many mediaeval saints like Kabir, Nanak and Tukaram became popular because they identified themselves with ordinary human beings. They distinguished themselves with their sympathy, their understanding of the needs and interests of the oppressed section of the society and their apparent addiction to certain deeper sympathies. These qualities added to their charisma and made everyone they touched follow them. On the other hand we have the Buddha who has now been made into a superior impersonal ideal, Jesus Christ to the position of the Son of God and Muhammad, the Messenger of Allah.

Times have changed since. In the twentieth century, the term humanism has acquired a wider dimension. Neo-humanism is a form of reaction against the mechanistic and dehumanization resulting from the over-confidence instilled in man by science. It is these changed times which give humanism its new meaning. Humanism is not based on our understanding of man and his relation with the environment. Such a humanism is, by its very definition, unitary instead of being dualistic. Instead of being particularistic it now incorporates much continuity with rest of life and the rest of life with the rest of universe. Humanism is now naturalistic instead of being supernaturalistic affirming the unity of the spiritual and the material; it is global instead of divisive. Humanism, today, is a directional process and not static in terms of quality, diversity, quantity and unity. In its present form humanism will have nothing to do with absolutes. Absoluteness, absolute morality, absolute perfection, absolute authority, are terms that find no place in modern humanism par excellence which insists that we can find standards to which actions and aims can be properly related. Humanism is now an attitude towards and an approach to man's life and values confined to his life here on earth. As such, it is characterized by interest in man, concern for man and faith in his reason and conscience to perceive truth and goodness. A typical humanist is a believer in the dignity of man and is averse to advocating man's dependence on God either for worldly gains or for spiritual upliftment and salvation. It can be safely said that humanism is the attitude which attaches primary importance to man and his faculties, affairs, temporal aspirations and well being.

Gautama, the Buddha who appeared in the 6th Century BC, is unique among the founders of religions in more ways than one. He did not claim either to be the message-bearer of an omniscient God or the vehicle of a revealed scripture; nor did he claim to be an omniscient teacher whose word should be accepted as a matter of faith. Buddha was more inclined to look upon experience as both, the source and the touchstone of truth. His teachings reveal his humanistic attitude. Buddhism is a religion of kindness, humanitas and equality. Among the great religions of the world, Buddhism probably has a greater claim to be called humanistic. While the great Chinese thinkers, Lao Tze and Confucius, have pronounced humanistic teachings, they were not averse to indulging in metaphysical teachings which the Buddha avoided. When he first ventured out of his palace, legend tells us that he met an old man and felt that he was subject to the frailties of old age, met a sick man and felt that he was liable to sickness, saw a corpse and realized that even he was mortal, and then met an ascetic, wearing a peaceful countenance, one who had adopted the traditional way to seek the religious truth. The Buddha then resolved to gain freedom from old age, sickness and death by following the ascetic's example. The mendicant is believed to have uttered the following words to the Buddha:

Namo-pagato jnanam-meru bhūtah
Namanāh sarvajñatwai mokṣa - bhūtah.

(I am a Stavan, an ascetic, who in fear of birth and death have left home life to gain liberation)

After attaining enlightenment, the Buddha preached his realisation to all hoping to bring about a benediction in human welfare. Buddha's life was spent in concern for the sorrow of men and in helping heal their troubles with his message for the good of many (Buddha-jana-bhikṣaya) based on compassion for humanity. Buddhism teaches us not to envy or hate the rich because of their wealth, not to despise the poor for they are what they are because of their deeds in previous life and have the chance in this life to change their destiny.

Humanistic ethos of Buddhism developed much better than the Indian moral principles and also spread all over Asia. It reaped the rich harvest of a universal compassion as identical to universal Nirvana. In Buddhism, humanism is the attitude of mind which attaches primary importance to man and to his faculties, affairs, temporal aspirations and well being. Buddhism insists on the supreme importance of the performance, on the part of the spiritual aspirant, of sublime duties like benevolence towards all (Karma), compassion for the distressed (Karuna), joy at the happiness of others (Mudita), and indifference to the faults in others (Upikusha). It has been rightly observed that "meditational practices constitute the very core of the Buddhist..."
approach to life... As prayer is Christianity so meditation is here the very heart and soul of the religion. The Buddhist's main motto was to free human beings from worldly sufferings. Buddhism's enlightenment (Bodhi) or wisdom, the deliverance of which constitutes the famous Buddhist doctrine of Four Noble Truths (Cattasri aryaayamana) and the Eight-fold Path. The Four Noble Truths expounded by the Buddha are simply stated as follows: There is suffering in life, there is a cause for suffering, there is a state or condition of absence of suffering and there is a way to that state of cessation of suffering. The way to the end of suffering is the Eight-fold Path and the state of release from suffering is Nirvana. The Eight-fold Path, according to Buddhism, comprises of right belief, right resolve, right speech, right conduct, right livelihood, right endeavor, right mindfulness and right concentration. It is said that Buddhism is the complete civilization of man. The aim of Buddhist ethics is the regeneration of humanity. These teachings, professed and expounded by Buddha were for the welfare of human beings which shows his humanitarian attitude towards all living beings. Buddha's two-fold wisdom holds human existence as being meaningless when in isolation from an ideal of life to be realized and conceives this ideal negatively in terms of the concept of Nirvana. Nirvana, regarded as the ideal of human life, means the extinction of egoism or mere individuality along with inordinate craving (Dham) which is the source of human suffering. The two schools of Buddhism, Hinayana and Mahayana, differ in the present context primarily because of their respective conceptions of individuals who have realized the ultimate significance of human existence or the ideal of human life. According to the former, such an individual is an Arhat, whereas in the latter's view, he has reached the state of Buddhahood. It is in view of this that they insisted on the supreme importance of the performance of five supreme duties by the spiritual aspirant. These are precisely the duties which, according to Mahayanaists, are incumbent upon every individual to perform so that the ideal of Arhatship gets transformed into that of Buddhahood and individual self-culture sublimated into universal liberation of mankind. This is how Buddhism envisages the possibility of universal ethics of humanity, which is just another name for humanism in the sense of the religion of universal liberation.

Buddhism has been a progressive movement of thought and self-culture with the regulative principles of human conduct and the directive to the furtherance of the cause of humanity started from the enlightenment of a deeply meditative mind and the successful career of an earnest seeker of the truth and the way and that of a thinker and teacher. Just as Judaism is the earliest monotheistic religion, Buddhism is the earliest brand of humanism. Buddha brought into existence what he perhaps conceived to be a miniature model of a humanistic society in the shape of monastic order. This was a model where all artificial or unnatural distinctions between men—such as distinction of caste—would disappear and wisdom and moral excellence would serve as a tie to bind individuals together into a common humanity, Buddha said.

Just as, oh monk, the great rivers, the Ganges, Aravati, Sindhuv and Nadi, when they fall into the ocean, lose their names and Govers and are known as the ocean, even so do the four castes of Brahmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas and Sudras, when they have gone forth in the doctrine and discipline taught by Tathagata from a house to a homeless life, lose their names and castes, and are known as ascetics, men of the Sakyas.

Buddha further removes the caste distinctive by saying:

One does not become a Brahmana by birth
One does not become an ascetic by birth
One becomes a Brahmana by act
One becomes an ascetic by act

The followers of Buddha also work on the same line. Apart from the details of Ashoka’s administrative reforms (which may be ascertained from any authoritative treatise of his practice of statescraft) his edicts concerning the constitutional checks against the crown and the charter of right for the citizen, offer eloquent testimony to his earnest attempt to build a society and a state in accordance with the principle of humanism. If a genuinely wholesome outlook on life was ever brought to bear upon the conduct of human affairs, it was done by Ashoka, who in turn was inspired by the teachings of Gautama, the Buddha. Buddhism is a constructive and peaceful chord for the welfare and happiness of the many (Buddhasana kutya, ksh accompanied Buddhist timber). The absolute enlightenment and compassion of Buddha humanism, should the Buddhist Vedana come to the truth for man relationships and social action, have great possibilities for transformation among living beings. Prince Shotoku of Japan, who introduced Buddhism into his country, built a temple, a hospital, a dispensary and an asylum for insane persons. Japanese monasteries, in turn, built bridges and ferries and promoted medical aid. In Thailand and Vietnam, a large number of dispensaries and hospitals were built and there was widespread ministration of sick by Buddhist monks. The pithy inscription of Jayavarman VII of Kamboja (1181-1206 AD), whose empire extended from Burma and Malaya to the border of China, mentions 192 hospitals staffed by physicians and nurses, in different parts of the kingdom. The spirit of nonviolence and non-injury to all sentient beings and universal compassion are the most precious gifts of Buddhism to the world.

Another aspect of Buddhism reflecting its humanistic outlook is the growth and spread of Buddhism in India and other countries of Asia through peaceful means. A singular feature of the spread of Buddhism has been the fact that not a single drop of blood was shed in the name of Buddha's teachings. Though the Buddhists had been persecuted by anti-Buddhist victors in India, China, Central Asia and other parts of the world, no Buddhist king or monarch in India was known to have been led to war for the propagation of Buddhism. The Mahayana's humanist ethics developed the Indian moral principles further and spread these to the whole of Asia. It set forth the idea of universal compassion as being identical to universal Nirvana and the ethical imperative of the Buddha-nature who symbolizes the virtues of the lottery - infinite solicitude and service for fellow-man through the cycle of rebirths as long as all creatures as numerous as sands in the banks of the Ganges are not redeemed. Asanga, the Mahayana poet-philosopher writes the Buddha-nature lives for beings in the supreme marvel of the world, or rather, it is not since ether and self are for him identical, since all beings are to him as himself. The text Bodhisattvabhumi remarks that the senses of the Buddha-nature are keener and wider; he lives for his own well-being and for the well-being of infinite creatures of the universe; and his enlightenment has infinite scope, by not entering into his own salvation, and by continuing through infinite births to do good to creatures, he strives to possess all the virtues (pratimoksa) - charity, good conduct, forgiveness, meditation and enlightenment. Another Mahayana text asserts, "My self, I will place in suchness and, for the sake of helping all the world, I will also place all beings in suchness; the immeasurable world of beings I will lead to universal Nirvana." Mahayana morality has been the perennial object of a profound sense of tenderness for life, love, altruism and service for fellow creatures in all Buddhist countries. This underlies the deep and spontaneous humanism and socialism. Buddhism has shown not only a marked spirit of socialism and humanitarian service for the have-nots but also eclecticism, mutual accommodation and convergence in several regimes and cultures of India, Asia, not to speak of its remarkable organizational power. Certain ideas which are directly involved in the Buddhist doctrine of Nirvana, and certain others which are associated with it, may serve as the basis of the principle of co-active which may be held to constitute the way to liberation in its wholeness and entirety.

It is said that in all cultures and during all times, women have never been considered mere entities or totally ignored. Women have, however, never been accorded the same kind of universal respect as is conferred upon men. History also stands testimony to the fact that no matter how superior men are regarded, women have frequently challenged this conception and at times even won a more honoured standing, both, in life and in literature. According to I. B. Horner, "In the pre-Buddhist days, the status of women in India was on the whole low and without honour. During the Buddhist period, there was a change. Women came to enjoy more equality and greater respect and authority than even hitherto accorded to them." Horner gives the credit for this change to the Buddha for he gave the Dhamma to both; he also gave talks to the householders and their wives. It was impossible, Horner argues, for the men, steeped as they were in the Buddhist teachings, not to respond to the constant proofs in daily life of the powers of women's devotion, self-sacrifice, courage and endurance that symbolizes a woman. Under Buddhism, more than ever before, a woman was an individual in command of her own life until the dissolution of the body and less of a chattel to be respected only when she lived for a man. The old complete dependence in which a woman will never exerted itself and functioned only to obey was gradually vanishing.11 Jethi mentioned that even according to Ambedkar, Buddha was an upholder of the doctrine of equality of sexes.12 A. S. Atrekar further adds that before 500 BC, the status of women in India was comparatively better than what it degenerated to in the following years.13 His views might be correct, but there is no denying that the position of Indian women became more prestigious with the introduction of Buddhism. They were allowed to enter the Order and had freedom of religion. P. Lakshmi Narasim also said, "Men and women were placed by the Buddha on the same footing of equality."14 It becomes clear that the Buddha's mission of tender compassion for all beings was set forth to establish the kingdom of righteousness, to give light to those enshrouded in darkness and to open the gate of immortality to all.15 It is generally believed that the Buddha was a great social reformer, a believer in the equality of all human beings, a democrat and that his efforts for the emancipation of women and lower castes created a sort of social revolution in Indian society.16 According to Ambudkar, "No caste, no inequality, no superiority; all are equal. That is what the Buddha stood for."17也可以提到 that, "Buddhism ignores completely and absolutely all advantages and disadvantages arising from birth, occupation or social status and sweeps away all barriers and disabilities arising from the arbitrary rules of pure ceremonial or social impurity."18

Buddhism assumed more serious proportions when it came forward as a religion without God and one that exemplified itself as the earliest forms of humanism in the religious history of the world. The evolution of Buddhism, however, confirmed to the spirit of humanism only occasionally and not continuously or ceaselessly as it was expected to do. This was mainly due to two sets of cause - one internal to Buddhism itself and the other external. The former consists of at least three factors. One of these was Buddha's creation of the monastic which amounted to the official recognition of the division of society into classes - precisely a practice which Buddhist intended to do away with in the first place. This, went against Buddhism's spirit of humanism. The second was Buddha's dependence upon royal patronage for his missionary activities. This, too, was opposed to Buddhism's humanistic outlook of life. Kings, after all, are embodiments of power, authority and privilege which should have their place in the scheme of humanisation of the individual and the society. Buddhism, which started in India, spelling the ruin of the cause of humanism, continued doing so in exile with the result that what was left of Buddhism is just its name, the original concepts lost long back. This is one of the tragedies of the historical process due to the folly of man himself which should have been avoided if the planet was to develop into the "best possible world". The Buddhist teacher Aryadeva summarizes the doctrine of lord Buddha only in one word, "non-violence". A compassionate and nonviolent sovereign of the world protects the people of the world and leads them to material prosperity and intellectual development. A Chakravartin does not use arms; he does not punish, he conquers the world not by force, but by the means of Dharma (righteousness) only. The four rules of Buddhist morality obligatory on all practitioners of the religion are:
1. One should not kill.
2. One should not steal.
3. One should not be sexually sinful.
4. One should not speak a lie.

The Dharma or word of the historical Buddha is contained in the canonical works of Buddhist sects. But, Buddha, the embodiment of great compassion and wisdom, is beyond the pale of sectarianism. He is the very essence of truth and goodness and the sublimity as contained in his teachings. A number of Buddhist communities observe many ethical rules to conquer temptation. Among these, the practice of charity (Breadth: Sarity), non-possession (Unsateda) and nonviolence (Ahimsa) are the two main rules of Buddhist life. Buddhism has been a great force for peace in the world. The Buddha's policy of peace, self-sacrifice, kindness and charity finds an echo in the following lines from the Mahabharata:

Aksobhya jayet krodham avadham avadhunam jayes jayat kudaryam dhemat jayet satyam carytanam.21

(One should conquer anger by cool-headedness, evil by good, misfortune by charity and falsehood by truth)

Buddhism promotes the same tenet thus:

Aksobhya jine krodham avadham atidha jine 1 jine kudaryan dhamen uccita atikviddham 13311

(Dhammapada: Krodhakatya)

In general, Buddhism refers to the teachings of Buddha but the actual Buddha Dharma is the inner realization which directly protects living beings from their sufferings. If we do not contemplate the nature of Dharma, then we will not understand the usefulness, capabilities, and function of Dharma and we will not be able to judge whether or not we need Dharma. It is Buddha Dharma which protects living beings from suffering, fear and danger. However, in order to become free from our own problems and sufferings, we need to exert great effort to achieve Dharma. Buddhists teachings are like medicine. Buddhism is he doctor himself and community of Buddhist followers (monks/lassos), the nurses. We need their services if we wish to be freed from our sufferings.

REFERENCES

2. Ibid.
8. Udana, V. 5.
11. J. B. Howard, women Under Primitive Buddhism, Delhi, Reprint, 1975, p. 1/.
20. Dhamma sacsaat thicham varupa sama tathagatath (chawasakura).
Various religious textual sources ascertain the fact that Sikkim is one of the ascroast hidden Buddhist zones recognized by Guru Padmasambhava, the fountainhead of Tantrayana Buddhists.

*Denjong Nye-Pig (The Pilgrim’s Guide to the Hidden Land of Sikkim), by Lhason Jamred Pawa, based on Lama Gampala Gyatso revealed by Terton Sangay Lingpa (1346-1396) has the following description of Sikkim:

"*The auspicious Hidden Land of Sikkim, having a square topographical appearance, is situated in the southwest of Sarnye Monastery, Lhasa, Tibet, and is..."
close to the southwest face of Mt. Kjem-shing. Its eastern border touches Mt. Sidkis of India; the western border touches the mountain of Zor district of U-Tiang, Tibet, and the Northern border touches Lake Tso-mo Dri-Chu.

The upper range of the country, the northeastern side, reaches up to Gangchen Zod-nag, and the lower southwesterly range touches Banga (India). It is a fertile land which grows a large variety of fruits, crops and medicinal herbs, etc., and its valleys are stretched openly and are quite spacious. Hence, it is called Demo-shong (the original name of Sikkim), i.e. “The Hidden Land”.

This prophecy and instruction was given by Guru Patma Sambhava on the request of Chogyal Trisong Detsen and the Guru’s twenty-five disciples. Guru Rinpoche also imparted oral instructions on how to enter this Holy Land and the disciplines to be followed while entering. He further described the topographical appearance of this Hidden Valley, its edible plants, fruits and mineral resources necessary for the survival of the human race and also gave directions mentioning the suitable season for entering this land from the gates in four directions.

As per the Hidden Treasures of Terron Rigzin Jigmé Lhapa (1736-1798), Guru Rinpoche identified six countries and five valleys as sacred Hidden Lands of Buddhism. Lho-mon Demo-shong (Sikkim) is one of the five valleys. The other four are Tsu-yi Gangyi Kawa, Ngari Korrum, U-Tiang Bahu and Dokham Gair, all in Tibet.

Given below is the translation of another description found in Chogyal Trisong Detsen’s Secret Prophecy (7th Century):

“As the time when there is no peace in Tibet, or it is facing a tense situation, all those Dharma practitioners can flee and take refuge in the Hidden Land, the glorious Hidden Land of Sikkim is a blissful haven. I prophesied this for the sake of Tibet.”

Given all these references, Sikkim’s special status as invaluable and sacro-sacred Buddhist zone cannot be overemphasized. Further, the term "Hidden Land" is interpreted in the following way by various religious texts:

Externally, Hidden Land means the land so encircled or locked by mountain chains and cliffs that it keeps the malevolent elements away.

Internally, a Hidden Land signifies the people born on its soil who possess the virtue of kindness, are God fearing and generally refrain from indulging in negative activities which displease the guardian deities of the land. Undesirable activities like burning of unwanted things in fire (meat etc.), slaughtering of animals and sprinkling blood on objects of worship, cutting trees which are the home of various spirits, polluting lakes and rivers and blasting of hills and rocks etc are said to be disastrous to the inhabitants of this land. (These descriptions can be found at page 31 of Denjong Nye-Sol).

The secret meaning of 'Hidden Land' is that Sikkim is accorded a place and importance similar to the abode of Guru Rinpoche's Zendok Palri. The people of this land are treated as Powsos and Pamos, meaning highly enlightened and pure beings. The land was declared by the Guru as the most suitable place for meditation and practising of Buddhism, whose practitioners can attain real Buddhahood (enlightenment) within their lifetime itself.

The tradition of worshipping supernatural beings such as various deities, dakinis and local demigods has existed in Sikkim since ancient times. The practice of making offerings to the local guardians, demons, spirits residing in lakes, passes, rocky hills, trees, valleys and waterfalls has been a feature of monasteries of this land for an equally long period. These practices have been established for maintaining peace and harmony in this land and are cited in the special prayer text called Denjong Nye-Sol

The basic reason of making such offerings is to escape the cruel wrath of the various preceding deities of the land and to ensure all-round peace and progress here. Any negligence on the part of the residents of Sikkim is believed to cause severe problems. The annoyance of these deities is often manifested in the form of actions of wild animals. For instance, if the Du-tsem Demon is annoyed, his wrath is manifested in the form of an angry bear creating problems in villages. The guidelines on how to keep the deities happy as per the Guru's guidance are enunciated in various Denjong Nye-Yigs.
THE SPIRITUAL RECOGNITION OF SACRED LAKES

The Dorje Nyima Pilgrim Guide of Sikkim by Tenzin Rigzin Godemchen (1339-1403), records as many as one hundred and nine sacred lakes in Sikkim. Some of these are: Phucho Karpo (the White Lake in the upper valleys), Tam-choe Marpo (the Red Lake of Tan), Dzep Nyampo (the Blue Lake in the lower valleys), Tongshing (Khesopali) and many others.

Tenzin Rigzin Godemchen’s list is supported by a similar enumeration given in Drepung Nyer-Nyel. ²

The third Lhatse Jigmed Paktso (19th century) has recorded the number of sacred and sanctified lakes at four hundred and four in his Drepung Nyer-Nyel and has based his addition on the Drepung Lom-Yig of Lama Gyurme Cycle revealed by Tenmin Sangyig Linglog (1340-1396). He is said to have spent a number of years in Sikkim during which time he founded many monasteries like Thensang and Lingthem Go-pa. Lhatse Jigmed Paktso is also believed to have visited almost all parts of Sikkim during his stay here.

Although his list of 404 sacred lakes is believed to be true, there are no specific names indicated in the text leading Buddhist followers to believe that the lakes mentioned are the sacred abodes of different deities, dakinis and tsemoons (water nymphs). Therefore, they are sanctified and worshipped.

Some of the sacred lakes in West Sikkim are Khudchod Talin Lake (Tso-ling), Karthok Lasa, Kaged Lasa and Phucho Karpo in the northwestern valley of Sikkim. The beautiful Tamuyo Lake and Memoi Tal Lake lie in the East and T Ridge Lake (Yangang) and Tso Meing Dun Lake (Dorling) lie in North Sikkim, while the most popular of the sacred lakes, Guru Dongmar and Tso Lhoma fall in North Sikkim.

Guru Dongmar Lake, in extreme north Sikkim, draws many pilgrims from all areas and is surrounded by many remarkable holy places like Larding, Rangjon, Namjym Tshuth and Chochen Nyima. The lake is worshipped with hopes blessings for long life and creation of an epidemic free existence of the land. Infantile women and couples wishing a male issue seek blessings at the lake. It is also believed that sometimes predictions are also made in the lake. The devout, it is said, get to see the future in the form of letters or scenes on the lake’s water after the required prayers and offerings have been made.

Guru Dongmar literally means “The Red Faced Guru” and sounds similar to Guru Dragmar, which means “The Red Coloured Wrathful form of Guru Padmasambhava”. The Guru Dongmar Sadhana, which is one of the most popular hidden Terchos (treasures) of Guru Rinpoche revealed by various Terrons, is widely practised and preserved in premier monasteries of Sikkim headed by Penab Yangse, Phensang and Enkhey with symbolic mystic dances and other rituals. Many lamas and practitioners in retreat and meditation course often choose this unique Guru Dragnar Sadhana. This is the reason why local inhabitants, all ardent devotees of the Guru, have a tradition of performing special annual puja on Tsetu, or the first ten days of the New Year according to the Tibetan calendar, at the mouth of small cavern at the source of the lake. This is the granite through which the people show their gratitude to Guru Rinpoche's lake and pray for peace and prosperity and general benediction of the inhabitants of Sikkim.

As such there is not a speck of doubt about Guru Dongmar lake being one of the most sacred lakes for all Buddhists. Moreover, the physical imprints of Guru Rinpoche found on rocks and caverns of different localities of Sikkim bear a testimony to the fact that the entire zone of Bayal Demojong was personally and physically blessed by Guru Rinpoche along with his fifteen disciples including king Trisong Deutsan.15

All the texts (Terchos) of Guru Rinpoche's prophecies indisputably prove the same truth and should finally put to rest any doubts on the lake's spiritual importance to Buddhists.

REFERENCES

   c) Lama Gondul Denjong Lam-Yig by Terton Sangay Lingpa, Vol. 6 (CHA) p 528-531.

14
8. Lama Gongdu Denjong Lam Yig by Terton Sangay Lingpa, Vol 6 (G4A), p. 506.
9. The Eight Wrathful deities of Nyingma Tradition of Tantra. The first five are transworldly deities and the rest worldly deities.
An Analysis of Tantrayana (Vajrayana)

Prof. P. G. Yogi

Tantra is a discipline, a method and study. It is based on a rational foundation, is conceivable in theoretic consciousness and realizable through yogic experiences. Ironically, however, there are those who have ignored these points and picked up bits from particular sadhas, parts of which are apparently vulgar and obscene, and come to the conclusion that Tantrik spiritual practices resort to sexual indulgence. Before entering further into this debate, it needs to be mentioned here that in the Tantras, the ideal of womanhood has been epitomized and raised to the exalted position of motherhood which in itself is unique in the history of spiritual literature of the world. Moreover, it is clearly stated in the Tantras that the secret of life lies in sexual control and death in sexual indulgence (Manasam Brinda puram, seventam Bhuta Dhananuja).

As against the conventional ascetic disciplines, the Tantras uphold the theory of sublimation to which asceticism has been equated with sexuality. In this theory, desire itself is subjected to rigorous discipline and used to conquer desire. There are others who subscribe anything ugly, erotic, spiritualistic and magical to the Tantras. They produce fantastic stories garnished with absurd episodes relating to astral plane and connect them to Tantras. They forget that Tantra is a meta-science (surya-vinam) dealing with consciousness, variable at every stage of spiritual experience. Further, the realization of supreme Truth which will give a true perspective of the Tantras has been interpreted in various ways. Tantra has been analyzed as a critique of experience. Consciousness in different aspects plays a vital role in the philosophy of the Tantras and experience is the guideline which analyzes and determines the nature of the said consciousness, both as the empirical and in the transcendental. Experiences in the Tantras may also be analyzed in terms of consciousness, conscious of itself. A 'Tantra aspirant must be intelligent (daksinā), have his senses in control (littikṣa), abstaining from injures to all beings (Sārva bhaṁma Viśnuśakti), ever doing good to all (Sārva pratiśītyā), a believer in the self as existence (ātma), have birth and refuge in Brahmā (Brahmav-adī-Brahm parayana) and who is a non-dualist (dvaitaśīta).

Further, intellectual apprehension of the Tantras, strenuous self-sacrifice, unflinching devotion to sātras and their teachings, observance of the ritual and yogika practices are regarded as efficient methods of approach to siva, the supreme self. Those ways to realization, those of Sambhava, Sota and Anava, are recognized in Kastrīya Sāivism, together with the siva savi idea of freedom have been discussed. It is interesting to note that the pratyabhijna school of Kastrīya Sāivism has close affinity to the Saktavaiśnavada of the eastern regions, particularly of Bengal and Assam. In this context, the six cakras (sāta-caktra), piercing of the cakras (sāca-cakra-bheda), the power as Kundalini and the role of Kundalini in realizing the self as knowledge is awakening our latent consciousness and self-analysis. The subject-contexts reveal the outline of an Indian system of thought which is resourceful in experience, rich in contents and colourful in many of the inner secrets of Indian culture. It is realistic in attitude, practical in application and sublime in spiritual aspiration. In this system, nothing is rejected as completely lost, rather, everything is accepted and hence accommodated in its respective potential value. It is a living philosophy whose true spirit is now lost. May be not lost, but it is definitely ill-conceived, misinterpreted and badly practised. In the modern world crisis, it had got a definite role to play and delivers a message of hope to problem-striken humanity. The influence of Tantras over the people from the past to the present is significant to note.

'Tantra', 'Mantra' and 'Yantra' are sometimes used as synonyms for each other, but the Yantra aspect of the Tantras will not be discussed in this work and Mantra will only be referred to in a strait manner. Even the terms Agama and 'Tantra' are sometimes used in the same sense as the Veda is sometimes referred to as 'Nigātha'. The scope of Tantra is, however, much wider than that of Agama as the former deals with as many as twenty-five subjects such as the knowledge of Brahmā as consciousness, the nature of the Brahmā as consciousness, the principle of creation, maintenance and destruction of the world, concealment and grace etc. Agama, on the other hand, covers only seven of the said twenty-five subjects. In this connection, it might be of interest to note that the Yamala precede the Tantras and deals with only five of the subjects covered by the Tantras.

The term 'Tantra' is also sometimes used to mean a system having predominance of Sakti (power) while Agama bears an overtone of siva in terms of knowledge. It is, however, a recognized fact that in the philosophy of Tantra, consciousness as power and that of Saivism, are identical in the sense that in the Tantras, consciousness as power is always considered as being conscious of itself as ‘I’ in terms of Siva. Hence, the term ‘Tantra’ is used in the general sense as accommodating all other aforesaid meanings it covers. The prime object of this work is to exhibit the philosophy of Tantras in general terms of consciousness as power and gaining experience thereof. However, like the Vedas, the base of the Tantra is revelation, or in other words, consciousness involving knowledge as a transcendent act. Hence the Agamas or Tantras fall within the fold of Suasta Sastras (that which is heard) or revealed scriptures. To discuss and interpret såtras or scriptures from the historical point of view is difficult. The said scriptures are not supposed to have originated in time nor are they creations of ordinary human consciousness; such scriptures are believed to be of divine origin. Further, they are called eternal and immutable, they are what they are - pure and simple.

Like the Vedas, the Tantras or the Agamas are designated as Suasta Sastras brought down to us from time immemorial through spiritual tradition. Outwardly, these scriptures denote injunctions (niyama) and practices (vidhi) and essentially connote the nature of being revealed and revealing at the same time. Spiritually, they are some pure experience concepts realizable in terms of revelations of the mysteries of men and matter. Ethically they are the directive principles determining what is good and what is bad in the empirical. But then, there are the complications of a world to live in and consciousness to know and survive. Culture expresses itself in manners, customs, patterns of belief, ways of life, religion, philosophical thinking, etc. Civilization is sometimes measured by the degree of material prosperity. Indian culture or civilization is broadly represented by two diverse traditions - Aryan Vaidika and non-Aryan a-Vaidika. The term ‘a-Vaidika’ is synonymous to Agamika or Tantrika even though the term Veda is at times used for both Agama and Nigama. It should be noted here that the Aryan Vaidika culture is not very different from some of the main Agamika and Tantrika practices. Yoga (concentration), Asanabandha, Garuda (the vehicle of Vishnu), Conch Shell (Sankha), Conch Bangle (Sakha), Altars (Vedi) Posti (Yapa), Sivalinga (symbol of Siva), the image of Siva as Pasupati and seals on similar other finds in archaeological excavations bear testimony to the fact that the Indus Valley Civilization is not at least anti-Vaidika. There are different phases of cultural patterns of a particular civilization which alternate in different ages and finally evolve into a full-fledged system covering within itself the history of thought of that period. Similarly, Indian culture had to pass through different phases such as Agamika or Tantrika era Vaidika, Jaina, Buddha and the like. Nonetheless, reading the unity of thought within the six systems of Indian philosophy (sad darsana), there are differences within them not only in details of the discussion of a particular problem but also in some of the basic concepts. These differences crop up even within a particular system in the interpretations that different commentators have made of them. All these show a progressive trend of the Indian mind. The asta-tanu and asta-murti concepts of the Puranas bring out the eminent aspect of the supreme God, Siva, and the same concept is fleshed out again in the Mahabharata when it says:

bhut-adhyam sarvah-bhavah-purusha-pashyantisivakumah adhyatman deva-tanahkai-anabhucye kibhurte ca -

The Tantrika ritual includes the asta-murti puja of Siva in the eight forms of Sarva (Earth), Bhava (Water), Rudra (Fire), Ugra (Air), Bhima (Ether), Pasupati (Yajmana), Isana (Sun), and Mahadev (Moon). The concept of Siva finds expression in the famous Mahimah stotram of Pasupatastra where the eight aspects of Siva are named and depicted as the earlier explanation with the only difference lying in the replacement of Yajamana with Atman. This representation of Siva as Atman or Krauta is also mentioned in the Siva Purana. In his Saka Philosophy, M. M. Chopinath Kaviraja has stated: Siva and Sakthi are conceived as constituting the two aspects of one and the same divine principle, inalienably associated and essentially identical. Siva is the agent, Sakthi is the instrument. One is transcendent, the other immanent. The cosmic manifestations of Sakthi is, however, in essence, the manifestation of Siva himself and is conceived as immanent. It is further to be noted here that from the point of view of manifestation, Siva cannot even be conceived of as other than Sakthi. The Asta-tanu concept of Siva finds prominence in the works of Kalidasa, viz. Abhijnana-saktasamutam, Malavikagni-mitrarn and Kumara-sambhavam (cf 1.57, vi. 26).

The Tantras are not ancient authentic religious scriptures of the Aryan race and they are not accepted as religious scriptures throughout India. This so-called scripture or Sastra is the creation of Bengalese and its injunctions have been in practice only in Bengal (Gauda). The Bengalees are believers of self-determination (Tantrantrya) and have full confidence in their own strength and the Tantras propound precisely such an attitude towards life.

Amongst the Mahayana Buddhist, worship of deities such as Tara, Vajrayogini, Kuverapala and others have been in vogue and there are mantras, vijas and japa in Mahayana Buddhism prescribed for propitiating the same. So, if in the Hindu Tantras, there are similar Gods and Goddesses worshipped with specific mantras, vijas and japas, Hindu Tantra must have originated from the Mahayana sect of Buddhism.
The aboriginal tribes in India are worshippers of Sakti, spirits, ghosts, serpents, trees and the like and such practices are found in the tradition of Tantrika worship too. Hence, the Tantras owe their origin to the so-called barbaric tradition. The influence of Tantrika tradition is found not only in Bengal but throughout India. That the Tantras follow Mahayana Buddhism is also untenable from historical/traditional point of view in the same way that the belief that Mahayana Buddhism is derived from Tantra is unacceptable. Similarity of some of the religious practices is after all no proof of one being derived from the other. Whether the Hindu mind was moved, drawn and attracted by the teachings of Buddhism only and not with its fundamental tenets, in other words, should the Hindus pay obeisance to Buddhist gods for beauty, victory, glory and destruction of foes or strive for Buddha Nirvana? There is a great difference between the yoga undertaken for the extinction of all desires and the yoga practiced for acquisition of power, wealth and destruction of foes. It is true that in a particular type of Tantrika sadhana, there is a provision for practices (kriya) alleged to be beneficent such as Marana, Ucchana, Vastikarana and Smritibhavanana. These are also called abicara, but it is specifically stated in the Tantras that these practices should never be directed or motivated towards the satisfaction of any selfish end. Tantras, being primarily practical and realistic in nature, provide such practices as a guard against evil-doers and doing. Further, the said practices have no physical bearing. They work only in the psychological region.

The Bhagavadgita preaches niskama karma (right to work only and not to the fruits thereof) which might lead to the acquisition of knowledge. This is akin to the Buddha’s philosophy of Nirvana. On this account, can any body say that the Bhagavadgita also provides for Sakama Karma (works with some object to view i.e. work for power, wealth, beauty etc.) which is contrary to the spirit of Buddhism. Moreover, Hinduism, of all religions, provides different forms of religious practices for persons having different dispositions and competence (adhikara). This also does not fit in with the principles and practices of Buddhism. In the above context, how is it possible for them to explain the Sakyamuni’s renunciation (Vairagya), his loss of faith in Hinduism and his discovery of the new path whereby man could escape infinities of old age and death and achieve the final extinction of sorrows, in line with the practices of the Tantras? Lalita-vistara, the biography of Sakyamuni, states that Buddha was well conversant with Nigama, Puranas, Itihasa and the Vedas. When, both, the Vedas and Nigama are mentioned in the same context, the latter term refers to the Tantras which goes by the names Agama and Nigama. In light of this fact, the belief that Hindu Tantras originate from the Mahayana sect of Buddhism are rendered defunct. Again, Sakyamuni is said to have addressed the Budhakhas thus: "There are fouwho seek protection of and pay obeisance to Bedhna, Indra, Rudra, Visnu, the Deos, Karlukaya, Mother Kalyayati, Garapati and others. Some perform tapasya (ascetic practices) in the cremation ground and at the cresting of four maha." Speaking of the practices of heretics, he had once mentioned the use of wine and flesh, which it practices in some special form of Tantrika sadhana. Had not the Tantrika form of worship, then, been in existence before the advent of Sakya Mani? (Lalitavistara xi, ch. u. six. III)

It may be said that the strength of the above said analogical arguments depends on the fundamental points of agreement between the Tantras and Buddhism; but no such agreement or similarity is found between them save and except some superficial points in regard to the worship of some of the Gods and goddesses. Even in this context, it may be said that there are cases where there is no similarity between the vijanatra, as in the case of Nilakshana, of the two systems. In spite of these fundamental differences, it cannot be ignored that Buddhism and Tantras grew on Indian soil and it is not impossible that in the process of cultural synthesis, there was mutual exchange of ideas just as we find similarities in the subsequent period of history between Vajrayana, Sahajayana, Mantrayana Natha and Smajyayana cults of Buddhism on the one hand and Sakrism on the other.

Who are the persons called barbaric Afghanistan? Should we suppose that the Bengalee pandits composed the Tantra samhita in imitation of Dravidians inhabiting the distant South? Or, Should we suppose that the Tantrika system was adapted from the Mundas, Santhalas, Caras, Mechus, Kuchus, Khasias and the primitive inhabitants of Assam? Such interpretations are definitely absurd. The concept of Sakas is found almost in every literary work from India. It is in the Vedas, Samhitas, Upnishads, Mahabharata, Puranas and other literatures. Moreover, the Goddess Sakas is worshipped in different forms throughout India - in Kamala, Vindea Hills, Kasi, Vindavas, Rajasthan, Turhi, Hidimbar and so on. Historical survey of religious practices prevalent in ancient India does not support the view that because Tantras advocates the practice of Sakas, therefore it is of recent origin and that the advocates of this samhita are Bengalees. Sometimes, it is even believed that Yogini Tantra is of recent origin and at the most only three hundred years old. This is obviously an incorrect assessment since Raghuvamsha Bahuracharya, the great Shrama, and Krsnamahandi, Bhuracharya Agamavagisa, who were contemporaries of Sri Caityana, have referred to Yogini Tantra as an authentic work on the Tantra in their works, Sakti Tantra and Tantra-vma. There are also scholars who are of the opinion that because the term Tantra is not specifically mentioned in Svarga-vagisa by Aramaika Tantra, therefore it is not considered as an authentic scripture, but it should be noted here that the name of some of ancient scriptures too have not been mentioned there. These scholars have also not noticed in the Nanartha-varga of the aid work, there is a mention of Agama Sutra, which is but another name for Tantra.

Madhvacaracarya, the commentator of the Vedas, in dealing with the Patañjali system in his compilation of different systems of Indian philosophy, named Sarva-Dyana-Samgraha which quoted many passages from the Tantra Sutras, particularly with reference to what is called the ten fold disposition (Dasavidhi Swasthaka). Acharya Vacaupati Mira, the great commentator of the six systems of Indian philosophy, has spoken of the practice of meditation (Dhyanas) as of Tantra origin. Stotram-Samkaracarya, in his Sarvagama-Bhagya, mentions the determination of sex body centras (Satsakea) of the Tantras. It is hardly necessary to say that one of three great Ashtas if a Bengali. Before the compilation of Krsanadas Tantra Sata, there have been many compilers of Tantras such as Raghavananda, Raghavabhata, Virupaksa, Govind Bhatta to mention only a few. Krsanadasa, in his observation of the Goddessess Nila Sandavari featured in Tantra Sata, reveals that even Sandavarijacarya himself claimed that the famous hymns of Sakti (Ananda Lahari and Daksinamurti-stotra) are his work. Besides, there are many important compilations of Tantras such as Ramaccand-carhana, passages from which have been quoted by Vacaupati Mira in the chapter of Vatsi Puja in his Kriya-cintanamman which proves the antiquity of the Tantra, Mantra, Muktravali, Sra-Sankranta, Bhavanavari-parjata, Saradapila, Tripura-siva samuccaya, svacchdha-samgraha, Sra-samuccaya, Mantra-tantra-praksa and others. These compilations were prepared long before the time of Krsnanada and Raghunandana. Harita says: "Now we shall explain Dhama.
Dhama is based on the authority of Sthri. Sthri is of two kinds – Vaidika and Tantrika." Tantra-satra, in some authoritative works, is referred to by the terms Raharya (mythicism) and Vidyam (metascience) in addition to Agama and Nigama which again is used in some context in lieu of the Vedas. There is a great Tantrika scripture called "Svayyoga." One of its commentaries is the great Abhinivesa, the propounder of Kausura Saiman, otherwise called Pratyaabhija. Krsnanada has quoted some of the sutras of the said Agama as authoritative. This shows the affinity between Kausura Pratyabhijena and Sakravaitvadic prevalent in the eastern region of India.

SOME OPINIONS ON THE TANTRAS

Professor Masaharu Asaka, in his History of Religion in Ancient India, after citing Brha Tanajjini in evidence of Tantrika worship at the time of Asoka (240 BC), says that Tantra appeared even before Nagarjuna (200 AD) and that it has been successful in absorbing Buddhism despite all efforts to the contrary. In fact, as regards Buddhism, Tantra stands for a Hindu conquest. Further, in Tara-Tantra, it is stated that the Buddha and Vasistha were Tantrika seers and Khuladvihvanas. Prof. Heyman Wilson says that the Tantrika tradition is not the creation of a day, it has a long history behind it. Creation, maintenance and dissolution, propitiation of Gods and Goddess, religious cum spiritual practices, Purushartha, sat karma, dhyana, yoga and other similar practices have been discussed in the Tantras (see Varahi-Tantra). Prof. Cowell believes that the Tantras form a highly esteemed branch of literature. Sir Monier Williams, in his Indian Wisdom, has mentioned the Tantras and spoken ill of them though some of his findings are believed to be improperly presented.

22

Tantra Sastra is meant for all classes irrespective of castes, creed and sex. In this system, sex is no bar against spiritual initiations. It is stated in the Tantras that far from the Vaidika exclusiveness, the practice of family tradition is essential for all two-footed beings. By family is meant persons coming from a particular specific stock and tradition, in this context, consists of some long-standing practice both in the social and the spiritual. Tantra sastra affords to all freedom to be engaged in spiritual practice according to one’s competence and shows the practical method which would qualify the spiritual aspirant (sadhak) to proceed along the higher path of knowledge (jnana marga) - knowledge in terms of experience as distinguished from intellectual theorizing alone. Tantra is above all, a metascience, primarily concerned with the performance of rituals aiming at liberation, for, according to Tantra, not only theorizing, but also practice in proper direction is indispensable for gaining experience and freedom.

Tantra-satra is primarily a sadhana-satra, and all religions recognize spiritual practice (sadhana). The Tantra claims to be thoroughly practical in the sense that it affords direct proof of spiritual practices. Tantra also bears great affinity with the art of medicine (bhisisya) in so far as its practice outlook is concerned. Apart from primarily practical and real-life attitude of the Tantras, the rational side of this grand system is well developed. Tantra believes in Right and Competency (adikara and yogata) of the spiritual aspirants. The sacramental energy of the mantra, even when the spiritual preceptor (Guru) has venerated it with consciousness depends on the competency of the aspirant for its efficacy. Tantra believes in different stages of spiritual progress such as japa, dhyana, bhava and Brahma-sadhana which is the highest state of mind. For the Brahman, one who has realized Brahma, there is no difference in these stages. Tantra is vehemently opposed to any sort of listless, mechanical formality. It is pointedly stated in the Tantras liberation comes only through tantric-sadhana or intellectual conviction of the satvic. Knowledge of the Brahman cannot be attained without self purification and for such self purification, Tantra provides means taking cognizance of the secret spirit of the age (kala-dharma). Tantra-satra speaks of spiritual experience constituting of the fourth stage - Tirunya stage of con-schoonness, through the practice of Yoga, Hatha-yoga and various other forms of spiritual training have been admitted in the Tantras. Prof. De La Valle Poussin, speaking in context of Buddhist Tantra, remarks that the essential concepts of Tantra are metaphysical and subtle in character. His understanding is also applicable to the Hindu Tantra, where, for instance, the significance of Sya-Tantra, Maha-Tantra, Yoga-Tantra, the principle of Kundalini, Bijamata and the like are highly subtle, metaphysical and esoteric in nature. Besides, the technical terms of concepts such as yantra, mantra, mudra, yoga, tantra, etc., are used in the Tantras and practiced by the Sadhakas (spiritual aspirants) demonstrating the technical character of Tantra.

The Tantras, at present, are available in the Indian scriptures and also in Tibetan and Chinese records. It may be said that the Tantra is of divine origin, realised and realizable in super-sensuous experience of the yogins, practiced by Sadhakas and expressed in manners, customs and religious behavior of the tradition. Tantra forms an essential part of the dynamic aspect of Indian culture. Both, in philosophical speculation and religious practices, it exhibits that spiritual renunciation (bhikṣayata) and material progress (āśrama dāyas), go side by side in the history of Indian thought and the art of living.

***

TANTRA IN PALI BUDDHISM

TAN'TAM - A thread, main point, a literary work, religious treatise. Ab. 523, 878, 882, pat 82. Tantravāra, a weaver (Ab. 507 pat 82), Ananta Tantraratanakara, ocean of boundless literature (vuttotaya)

TANTI (f) - A string, line cord, the string of a lute, sacred 'ver, a passage from a sacred text Ab. 882, 996, pl. tantio (Oh. 354). Tanti is to a great extent a synonym of Pali which see, Thatha dhamm co tanti-sabh. Here the law means the scriptures: Tattvagatara, scriptural term (vi j.). Tantikasam Kaths Avakamtrvai Without oversetting any Pali kitam (vi j.) Tanjikalita, adopted to the sacred texts (ALW 19). Sammasambodhi pi tepulkam, Buddhacaranacanam tantim apoento Mahakī bhavya evi, arrested: the suprême Buddha when elevating his earings contained in the Tripilva in a text 48 so in the Magadhi language (ALW, I.V., comp, vi, note.) The Dighamkya is called tanti, a text (Dham)
TANTRA IN Pali BUDDHISM

The Awakened One is said to have achieved a distinction of being the Buddha. Pali Buddhism preserves the traditions in a discourse with Upaka prior to his running of the wheel of Dhamma (Dhammacakkappavattana). Gautama the Buddha declares the eminence:

Victorious one all omniscient am I.
Among all things defiled,
Leaving all through death of craving freed.
By knowing for myself whom should I follow.
For me there is no teacher.
One like me does not exist.
In the world with its duties
no one equals me.
For I am perfected in the world.
The Teacher supreme am I.
I alone am all awakened.
Become cool am I. Nirvana attained.

The above sayings explicitly refer to the core of the Tantra practice tending to retroversion (paravritti). A successful practitioner confidently declares, "No one equals me. I am all awakened." These are the characteristics of one who has regained his self-nature by freeing the mind from cravings and not instances of boasting or vanity of the Gautama the Buddha.

The Buddhist literature delves on measures which help in realizing a man's self-nature. The life force of a being emerges out of a bindu and dissolves into it and arrives at the condition from which it originates. This is retroversion (paravritti). In the depths of the mind, similar retroversion function and should be borne in mind that retroversion is distinct from extraversion (Pravritti) and introversion (avritti). Living beings, according to Buddha, are the conglomerate of mind and matter (nama-rupa) with a strong attachment (upadana) under latent impressions (Samskara) of ignorance about their self-nature. A being is easily delighted by pleasures and remains stuck in the cycle of life and death. A being fails to know what is deathlessness and finds pleasure in the realm of Maya under the letters of craving.

The Awakened One, knowing himself, becomes "Victorious" (Vighna) He claims: "Victorious one all, omniscient am I...by knowing for myself." Man possesses omniscience but fails to realize it because of his ignorance. The Tantra teaches one how to visualize the self-nature (Sva-bhava) which is essencelessness (nihsya-bhava). He who visualizes this essencelessness is Awakened from the slumber of ignorance.

Gautama exclaims:
This path through many sires I have won.
Enough, why should I make it known?
By gods with lust and hate consumed,
This dilemma is not stream, while deep, difficult to see delicate.
Unseen it will lie by passion slave
Cloaked in the mask of ignorance.

The teachings of Buddha are also ‘leading on against stream’, but these are aids to develop vision (sakkhatavat) and awareness of its end (sama-karan). His followers thereby possess an appropriate contemplation to concentrate on the source of being of beings in the worlds (pontumamanike) for right sight (sammāsāṇā) and right concentration (sammāsāsanā). The Mis sight (sava-simsa) of Being is correctly visualized by going on against the stream. In other words, practices are done in the method of rectification which is followed in the Tatta. The Tatta seeks to extinguish five passions to attain Buddhahood as the achiever explains, “Second cool are 1 Nirvana attained.”

With undaunted confidence, Buddha proclaims deathlessness among the blind on account of ignorance. Therefore, Gautama Buddha turns the Dhamma asalka in laipetana at Sarnath, Varanasi for the welfare of all beings of the world.

Evam me Sasaṃ evam Samayam Bhagava
Samayam vihanti Sisapattana meinasye

Thus have I heard: Once the blessed one was sojourning near Varanasi, at Sisapattana in the Deer park.

Tanakkhe Bhagavante prawattaye bhikkhu umeisse
Ude me bhikkhato anta pahā jātana na sat-sabba Kānye dom

Then, the blessed one addressed the company of five Bhikkhus. Bhikkhus, these two extremes should not be followed by one who has gone out of home to live homeless life.

What two?

Sasayam kameva samankha, laksayyego, hito, gama, parahajjima, 26
The giving went the pleasures of sense which is low, vulgar, worldly, unworthy and harmful, and the giving into self-mortification which is painful, unworthy and harmful. O Bhikkhu, by avoiding these two extremes the Tathagata has found out that middle which gives the vision, which gives the knowledge which tends the peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata, which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? It is this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. Thus, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

Now this, O Bhikkhu, is the Ariya (noble) truth of suffering: Birth is suffering, decay is suffering, death is suffering to be verified with things we abandon is suffering, to be separated from things we like is suffering, not to get what one wants, that is the suffering. In short, these five aggregates, which are the objects of grasping are suffering.

The giving went the pleasures of sense which is low, vulgar, worldly, unworthy and harmful, and the giving into self-mortification which is painful, unworthy and harmful. O Bhikkhu, by avoiding these two extremes the Tathagata has found out that middle which gives the vision, which gives the knowledge which tends the peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata,
which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? It is this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. Thus, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision,
which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata,
which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? It is this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. Thus, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision,
which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata,
which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? It is this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. Thus, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision,
which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.

And what, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path found by the Tathagata,
which gives wisdom, which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana? It is this very noble right-fold path, namely, right view, right aspiration, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. Thus, O Bhikkhu, is that middle path which is found by the Tathagata, which gives vision,
which gives knowledge, which tends to peace, higher wisdom, enlightenment and Nibbana.
Thus, at that very hour, at that very moment, in an instant of time, the cry reached even to the realm of Brahma and this whole system of ten thousand world systems quaked and quaked again, it was shaken to and fro and an immeasurable, mighty radiance shone forth, surpassing even the effulgence of Deva.

"Artha kha Bhagava udanam udanem. "Annasi vasa kha kondanna annasi vasa kha kondanna ti, tis hidam ayamato kondannasa Annasa-kondanno tesa namamahose it."

Thereupon, the esteemed one uttered this solemn saying, "Kondanna indeed has understood, Kondanna indeed has understood." Thus, it was that the venerable Kondanna who had his name Annasa Kondanna "he who has understood."

"Dhammacakkappavattana Sutta"
The First Sermon

1. Abhava Sutta and Mangala Sutta - Sunday
2. Ratana Sutta - Monday
3. Maha Sutta - Tuesday
4. Hadda, Maha and Batta Sutta - Wednesday
5. Dhammaputta - Thursday
6. Aka Natiya Sutta - Friday
7. Angulikulana, Bajjiha and Pubbhaha Sutta - Saturday.

The Sammasanabuddha (Thoroughly Awakened One) sees the world of existence through his wisdom eyes (Buddhacakkhu) and understands the real state of happenings where he see (yaathabhuta ravamandana). No dialectic therefore arises and his dhamma is beyond dialectics. The Tantra also disowns any debate or dialectics as it is based on direct visualization of the Truth. The Pali Vinaya Pitaka refers to that state through which Upanaatha was uttered by Buddha immediately after attainment of Nirvana. Truly, things grow plain to the ardent meditating Brahman.

"Buddhacakkhu" and the supreme, and the supreme-mandane, like the Sun, white, lighting up the sky.

Likewise, the Tantra aims at the coordination of the mundane (candam) and the supramundane (tan). To sum up, it is now evident that the Buddha's experiences as traditionally depicted in the Pali literature and philosophy bear resemblance with the experiences of an accomplished Tantra practitioner (Ratnapudgala). Entrance of the Tantra in the Buddhist thought is generally said to be a later addition or a phase of later Buddhism since 3-4 century AD.
Gautama is said to have achieved super-natural attributes like bala, vasita, vasakradya, abhijna and bodhiyana as his experience, and these details are narrated in the Vinaya Pitaka. These evidences suggest that the nucleus of the Tantra prevails in the Pali Vinaya Pitaka as the earliest source from which it has come down to us.
Seeing the Dhamma is the same as seeing the Lord Buddha himself as the First Sermon details, "He who sees the Dhamma, sees Tathagata."

DHAMMACAKKAPPAVATTANA (TANTRAS)
THE FIRST SERMON OF LORD BUDDHA

The sermon is based on the noble eight-fold path and the four noble cruts and forms the foundation of Tantric and many other suttas proclaimed by the Buddha and delivered at Isipatana. The basic teachings of Lord Buddha are full of Tantra. "If it were impossible to cultivate the Good, I would not tell you to do so," said the Buddha. This is indeed a positive, optimistic assurance common to Tantra.

In the vast bulk of Indological and other orientalistic writings of Indo-centric religious thought, practice and literature, serious work on the Tantras has remained so limited and so specialized that they have not come to form a genre within the oriental studies though they are as qualified as, say the Upanishads and the Pali canon. There is no excuse for this omission, unless prudishness, fear of social and scientific opprobrium and other items of pervasive calculation were presented as some. The fore-cited are perhaps valid excused because Tantrism is a delicate theme because of its intensive and extensive ramifications.

The Buddhist Tantrism, and to a certain degree the Hindu tradition, offers an interesting exception in a way. The Buddha may not have been counted among the learned of his day, but he was certainly a sophisticated speaker and a good propounder of his own doctrine.

* * *

VAJRAYANA

Vajrayana emerged as the third major division of Buddhism in the eighth century AD after Buddhism had already split into the Hinayana and Mahayana forms. This altogether new form of Buddhism developed with much emphasis on rituals, meditational practices, gods and goddesses and included within its fold elements like mantra, mudra, mandala etc. These were probably inclusions in the process of adjustments to the pressures of the environment. This phase of Buddhism is a kind of Buddhist Tantrism and the appellation of Manrayana or Tantrya is also given to this school as being based on mantra, tantras etc. Tantric Buddhism is similar to Hindu Tantric Shaiva in its form, characteristic, principles, doctrine and paraphernalia. It is important to remember in this connection that Tantrik tradition was not evolved by Hinduism or Buddhism out of its own select material, but as a fact grown out of the soil which both the Hindu and Buddhist use. Tantric literature should be regarded as an independent religious literature consisting essentially of religious methods and practices current in India from ancient times.

29

The Tantras, Brahmanic or Buddhist, represent a special aspect of social, religious and cultural life of India and it is not possible to trace the origin of any of these groups to any system or systems of philosophy. It is also a historical fact that some tantric trends arose particularly in India's extreme boundaries some even outside Indian territory. The supreme ideal of Tantric worship and practice is the identifying of the individual with the supreme. This characteristic of Tantra holds good for both the Hindu and Buddhist tantris. Both forms enunciate a theological principle of duality in non-duality and hold that the ultimate non-duality possesses two aspects in its fundamental nature: the negative and the positive, nirvana (cessation) and pravritti (origin). These two forces are represented as Siva and Sakti in Brahmanism and Prajna and Upaya in Buddhism. In the case of Brahmanism, the metaphysical principles of Siva and Sakti are manifested in the material world as the male and the female, and Buddhism, too, has the same interpretation for the manifestations of Prajna and Upaya. The ultimate goal of both is the state of perfect union of the two and the realization of the non-dual nature of self and nonself.

With the present level of knowledge on the subject, it is difficult to either trace any organic relation between Buddhism and Tantrism or to ascertain exactly when these esoteric elements were introduced to Buddhism. It is, however, an interesting study to try and find out how the teachings of Sakayamuni could incorporate so many heterogenous and sometimes even revolting ideas within its fold. On the basis of a statement in the Tawanganghata, it has been said that the Teacher made provision for these practices to help the disciples of lower calibre who would not be able to understand his noble and subtle teachings. This seems to contradict the life and teachings of the master who has always been represented as an uncompromising critic of the Brahmanic system of rituals and ceremonies. No testimony from any source can convince one that the Buddha whose entire life was dedicated to stem the tide of the evils generated by the prevalent religious systems, should have himself advocated for these elements only to attract a larger number of people to his fold.

30

Traditionally, Asanga, the exponent of the Yogacara philosophy has been credited with introduction of esoteric principles to Buddhism and some sources name Nagaratna, the propounder of the Madhyamika philosophy, as the founder of the Buddhist esoteric school. It has been said that the Buddhist Dharmas are the first codification of the ideas underlying the Tantra and that they form the ‘first kernel from which the tantras developed’. The Dharmas have been thought to as old as the Mahasanghikas and in this context, the origin of Buddhist Tantras may be traced to the beginning of the Christian era.

Whatever be the time and the reason for the introduction of esoteric elements and whoever be the person responsible for this, it seems reasonably certain that the Mahayana pledge for universal redemption had to make way for the current popular religious practices in Buddhism to make it generally acceptable. Buddhist principle and traditions tinged with these materials helped the growth of Tantrik Buddhism or Vajrayana. As a corporate system, Vajrayana has incorporated a large number of popular beliefs and practices which have played a significant role in the development of Buddhism in its later phase. With continuous flow of these elements into the body of Buddhism, the Teacher, who was so much against anything connected with deities and divinity, himself became edified and considered a Lokottara or superhuman. The Buddhist master with their broad-minded receptiveness, strengthened by the tendency of spreading over the backward frontier people, did not hesitate to accept their ideas and even deities into their fold after the elements were fully transformed and ‘purged of their primitive crudeness’. This formed an essential feature of later Buddhism. Many mantras of Vajrayana reveal contact of Buddhism with the frontier people. For example, Goddess Ekajata, later considered to be an avatar of Tara, is said to have been introduced by Nagaratna with her linguistic taken from the Bhoti country.

Vajrayana as a later development of Buddhism has included many heterogeneous elements from the abhara (spells employed for evil purposes) to the elaborate ritualistic worship of deities, compassionate attitude for the well being of all sentient beings, subtle meditational practices and so on and so forth. These inclusions also make a precise and comprehensive definition of Vajrayana impossible. The incorporation of a large number of Hindu deities along with the elements of mantra, dhara, japa, tapa and other similar concepts have changed the complexion of the Buddhist religion beyond recognition, providing some scholars to brand this phase of Bud dhism as Hinduism of Buddhists or Hinduism in the garb of Buddhism. This notion of Tantric Buddhism does not, however, appear to be justi died since this phase of Buddhism has still not lost the essence of Buddhism despite the strong infusion of Brahmanic ideas and beliefs. Though Maru-jani-mala-kapopa describes a number of Gods and Goddesses, Buddhism did not have, till the second century AD, any conception of a well-classified pantheon and it was only with the emergence of the Tantric phase that Buddhist deities multiplied. In the Vajrayana pantheon, Vajrasattva is the ‘Adi-Buddha’ - the primal enlightened one, the primordial God. Later Bud dhists too describe the Adi Buddha variously as Swarabhūmi, Dharmaraja, formless, and as the nature and form of the void and so on. The concept of a supreme Lord, developed itself into the idea of Adi Buddha, who is even held as the originator of Dhyani Buddha. Though there is much uncer tainty about the time and place of origin of the theory of Adi Buddha, the idea of Adi Buddha as the supreme Lord finds a prominent place in the Swarabhūmi Purāṇa and enjoys an important position in Nepalese Bud dhism. As the highest deity in Vajrayana, the Lord has been attributed with five kinds of knowledge which are to be taken as the five kinds and creative potencies in the ultimate nature of the Lord, that is pure consciousness.

These attributes of the Lord produce five kinds of dhyāna (meditation) and the five Dhyāni Buddhas who occupied so important a place in later Buddhism as having emanated from these five kinds of dhyānas. The five Dhyāni Buddhas represent and the five primordial cosmic forces responsi ble for creation and are considered the presiding deities over the five skandhas or material elements the world is composed of. Described as the progenitors of five biases or families which help the fulfillment of all desires and arrange ments of emanation, the deities are represented with a colour, a crest, a particular mudra (symbol), a mount (vahana), a particular Bodhaśatvā, a human Buddha, a bija mantra (mythical syllable), a particular kula and are associated with the five elements, the five sense organs and percepts. In the process Buddhists have introduced numerous gods and goddesses and it is perhaps in the text of the Gubhusamajā that we get a proper description of the Vajrayana pantheon for the first time. The different branches or sects of Vajrayana accepted the ideas and institutions current among the masses and with their inherent universality, invariable popular indigenous de ities in their mandalas (magic circles) as aspects of their chief Gods. As a result of this tendency, popular Hindu deities like Indra, Varuna, Mahesvara, Kuvera, Skanda, Vistara and even Kama, the God of Love, have all been admitted into Buddhism and find places in the magic circles as keepers of quarants. With the divergence of Buddhism into this direction, a large number of deities and Buddhist beings, often in female form and sometimes with monstrous appearances, also found place in Vajrayana texts [in almost all texts of later Buddhism, we find references to such beings as Chunda, Amba, Dakini, Vajrini, Vajrakila and a host of others like them. The incorporation of Hindu gods and goddesses into Buddhism reached its maximum limit with the development of the Kalacakrakaya system which appears to be the latest phase of Buddhist or for that matter Vajrayana. Though Buddhist tantra have been divided into three schools - Vajrayana, Shijayana and Kalacakrakaya - there is no source available to clarify this division. In its essence, form and character, the Kalacakrakaya system is a developed form of Vajrayana and so is the Sahajiyaka cult of Sahayana. Both, Tibetan and Indian sources agree that the Kalacakrakaya system was introduced to India from a country named Sambhala about sixty years before it went to Tibet. It is generally accepted that the system reached Tibet through Kashgar in 1026 AD. The tantrist religion is fully covered by the ideas and thoughts of this system and a large number of treatises have been written by Tibetan scholars on the subject.

32

The Vinayapariprama locates Sambhala in the north of river Sita and the Aryavarta, the land of the Aryas, India, is described as situated to the south of the river and in between the Himavat and the island of Lanka. Gomila de khoros places the land between 45 degrees and 50 degree north latitude beyond river Sita which he identifies as Jaranas. Description of the way leading to the mysterious land of Samshala as found in the Tibetan sources, however, suggests it is in East Turkistan to Sita of the Kalacakrakaya fame. The Sanskrit text and various Tibetan commentaries of the Kalacakrakaya school help us understand the real nature and characteristic of the system which, true to the principles of Tantras and Vajrayana, attempts to explain the whole creation within this body. An elaborate system of Yoga practice with the control of the vital winds in the body has been regarded as a very important and fundamental factor in realizing the truth in the form of the Lord Kalacakrakaya. A Kalacakrakayanist wants to keep himself above the influence of the cycle of time which is ever moving to cause decay, death and rebirth. The flow of time is nothing but the working of vital winds in the body. It is the action of these winds that time reveals itself and if a Sadhana can control and stop this action, he can stop the flow of time and can thereby raise himself up to the state of Mahasukha, removing suffering, death and rebirth.

Kalacakrakaya, the highest God in this system, is essentially of the same nature as that of the concept of Vajrayana found in different Vajrayana texts. He is the unity of Prajna and Upaya, the Bodhicitta, the ultimate immutable one in the form of the incorruptible great bliss - Mahasukha. He is without origin and without destruction, the unitary embodiment of knowledge and knowable embraced by Prajna, Transcendent wisdom, both endowed with and hereof of forms content. He is the creator of all Buddhas and the Adi Buddha. As the state of absolute unification of Sunyata and Karuna, Kalacakra is the one Lord to be realized by all Buddhists to free themselves from the bondage of repeated existences (Samatha). The importance of this concept, once exercised among the Buddhists, may be evident from the famous sentences reported by Padma Karpo to have been inscribed by Tsai Lu Pa on the upper side of the main entrance to the Nalanda monastery: “He who does not know the Adi Buddha, does not know the Kalacakra. He who does not know the kalacakra, does not know how to utter the mystic syllables properly.”

The Buddha is supposed to have preached the doctrine himself on the famous Grandhakuta mountain in Rajgriha after his proclamation of Mahayana Pinja parimitayana. He proclaimed the kalacakra teachings again at Dharmakuta which, with the famous Amarasat and the sacred Srivara, must have played an important and significant role in the propagation and development of Vajrayana in general and Buddhist Tantricism in particular.

Some Tibetan sources hold that the Buddha revealed the Mula Tantra of the Kalacakras in the year of enlightenment while others hold that the basic text was preached by the master in his eighteenth year of enlightenment. It is said that while the master was exposing the esoteric teachings in the assembly of gods, Bodhisattvas and others, King Sucandra of Sambhata was also present in a miraculous way and prayed to the Buddha for the text of the teachings. A year later, the Mahakalacakra with 12,000 verses was recorded and preserved in Sambhata. In course of his treatments of the lost portions of the Buddhist canon, Bodden notes the most remarkable in his history of Buddhism as having 12,000 verses. The extant Laghu text on the Tantra, however, has only 1047 verses in Sreg-dhatu verse. We cannot say with certainty as to who first made the system known to India. Tsai Lu Pa, Pitopa and the older kalacakra pada are generally regarded in different sources as the first Indian scholars of the system. Pitopa was a pupil of Aris or of Nanora, according to Tarazeha, and so cannot be held as the first Indian scholar to master the new teachings. If we are to believe the report that a new name was adopted by a siddha after every new initiation, then Tsai Lu Pa and the older kalacakrapada could be the one and the same person. Padma Karpo gives an account of Tsai Lu Pa birth and also how he had acquainted himself with the knowledge of the Tantras and the secrets of kalacakra through the grace of a Bhikhu who later instructed him to go to East India and spread the new system. He visited Nalanda and defeated the Achara Naropa in debate there. Naropa studied the new teachings of the Kalacakras under the victorious Tsai Lu Pa and later became a prominent interpreter of the school himself. Tasi Lo Pa is said to have established a line of teachers including the tradition of Kadampa. A more important school of teachers was started by Pandit Somnatha, a disciple of Nalopa. The tradition of Somnatha and his followers is known as the school of Kya as it was established by Chosrab of Kya.

Hence, with the Kadampa tantra as the more important factor in their philosophy, the Buddhists have attached greatest importance to astronomical speculations and to the movement and position of the sun, the planets, the constellations etc. As experts in astrology and astronomy, they interpret the principles and fundamentals of Buddhism in relation with time and its different units.

* * *

TANTRAYANA, By H. H. The Fourteenth Dalai Lama

The paths I have mentioned are doctrinal paths and they must be followed to provide a sound foundation before Tantrayana (the way of yogic method) is practised. In Tibet, the greatest care was taken before any Tantric doctrine was introduced. Spiritual teachers always investigated whether the doctrine was among those propounded by Lord Buddha and submitted it to logical analysis by competent pandits and so tested its effects in the light of experience before they confirmed its authenticity and adopted it. This was necessary as there were many non-Buddhist Tantric doctrines which were apt to be confused with those of Buddhism because of superficial resemblance. The Tantrayana falls into four classes and it has a vast number of creations which cannot be enumerated here. I the simplest terms it can be described thus: bad karmas are held responsible for the various miseries we suffer. The bad karmas are created through delusion. Delusion is essentially due to an undisciplined mind. The mind should therefore be disciplined and controlled by exercises that stop the flow of evil thoughts. This flow may be stopped as the wandering or projecting mind is brought to rest by concentration on the physical make-up of one's body and the psychological make-up of one's mind. The mind may also focus on the external objects of contemplation. For this, strong contemplative powers are needed and the figures of deities are found to be suitable objects for this contemplation. For this reason, there are many images of deities in Tantrayana (Vajrayana). These are not arbitrary creations, images, as objects of contemplations to purify the body, mind and senses have been created in wondrous as well as practical aspects and sometimes with multiple heads and hands so that they suit the physical, mental and sensorial attitudes of different individuals striving for the final goal. Progress towards this goal is achieved in some cases mainly through strong
BEGINNINGLESS AND THE ENDLESS TANTRA

Initiation of Tantrik Dharmacaktra tradition cannot be explained by the historical chronology of modern concept. Tantra has been delivered mostly by spiritual planes of Devaloka and Ekanitha (unabated). It also manifests in Jambu Dwipa as various Setha Devas (ideal Conception). The enlightened saints of India and Tibet mostly acknowledged this fact. Even those who have a grip over this kind of meditation and contemplation, and have attained ordinary and extraordinary siddhas, admit the same. Therefore, this mystic fact can not be disproved by little knowledge, intellectual imagination and futile arguments. This kind (Tantric) of mystic sayings are found not only in Tantra but also in Paramita Naya kind of texts. Not only in Paramita Naya, but also in Strak Yana (Dighanikaya in Pali), many of the esoteric and exotic demonstrations by Buddhhas are noted. In brief, it may be said that Yoga Sadhasas of Yogic Buddhas must be unfolding newer Tantric Dehasas (revelations, deliverances). As such, it is not possible to make any historical chronicle of Tantra, neither for analysis nor for practice, because even today, those who are meant to be carriers of Kriyakarma may get direct communications from Buddhhas and Bodhisattvas and do the needful. Admissibility of the outlook of today's theologians to conceptualize any orderly chronology of Dehasa, Dharma, Deva Upashana, kriya, chanyas, yoga or smartarayyoga and Siddhashasta (tracing as unfolding of the Sahaja vision) is reducible.

Briefly, Tantra is not bound by a beginning or an end. In field is vast, self-expanding and serious in understanding. In Karanduk Vyoha, kuth, Tantra and Mantra are available. In this way, the same text observes Adi Buddha, Samadhuddha and Mantra-Tatra correlated with Buddha Dharma and Bhakti Magga.
11. The DHAMMAPADA, Commentary Union Buddha Sasana Council, The Department of Pali, University of Rangoon, Burma.
13. Buddhism Among the Monpas and Sherdupeas, by Niranjan Sarkar.
17. Srimad Bhagavata
18. Laitavistara xi, ch. v. S. XIII
23. A History of Pre-Buddhistic Indian Philosophy, by B. M. Barua, pp. 196, 337.
27. Aspects of Indian History and Civilization, by Buddhak Prakash.
28. Aspects of Indian Thought, by M. M. Gopinath Kaviraj.
29. Tantra Studies on Their Religion and Literature, by Chiravhuran Chakravorty.
30. Sekoosa Tika of Nalakapala, by Manoel Caroll, Dr. Lin.
32. The Life of Buddha, by Edward J. Thomas.
33. The History of Buddhist Thought, by Edward J. Thomas.
34. An introduction to Buddhism, by H.H. The Fourteenth Dalai Lama

TANTRICSM IN THE VEDAS

35. Rig Veda, Py.IVI.154, 2, VII. 59.12,1.22.20,1.22.21, IV. 40.5, X.184.1, X.184.2.
36. The use of Protective amulets also seems to have been quite popular at the time of the Atharvaveda (AV. ii,ii.II.VIII.5 X.6, Kaushika abicara, srtikarma, Sammana sya. pausika and other sorcery rites of which we get references in the Atharvaveda are quite common in the Tantras).
38. Suta Patha Brahman - 1.1.18, 20.21 etc.
41. Oliga Nikaya, Vol. 3. 9th Sutta p. 150 (Pathakavaggas).

38
Notes and Topics:

Acharya Sonam Gyatso Dolkham

In this issue of Bulletin of Tibetology we are producing three articles. The first article deals with humanistic ideologies in Buddhistic Vedanta. The second article deals with spiritual importance of Sikkim Valley including its sacred lakes as per Buddhistic religious historical accounts.

The third article deals with an Analysis of Tantrayana in which Prof. P.C. Yogi has intensely explained the contrast of Cintiya and Maitrayana between Buddhist Dharma and Bhakti Marga.

We owe much to Shri Pema Wangchuk for his kind co-operation and help in re-designing this issue into easier form.
The following is a complete list of books published from 1961 to 1997. Full list of SRIT publications is available from SRIT office.

1. Arya Bhadrasnaya Pratishthayanaya, Prayer Book. Sanskrit-Tibetan, Ed. by Prof. Suniti Kumar Patnaik, 1961. Rs. 20.00
3. Pratibhavat, (xylograph), 1962. Rs. 200.00
5. Arya Sambhavatthahidhaharyatika, Lineage Khutulnu Latiyagera's Commentary in Tibetan, 1963. Rs. 25.00
6. Vimalashri Vajraparmara Siddhath Vasubhandhu (4th-5th century A.D.), 1964. Rs. 50.00
7. Tantric doctrine according to Nyenmapa School of Tibetan Buddhism, 1976, Reprint 1993. Rs. 20.00
9. So-ser-dam-pa'i mo'i me'ri mani-bodh. Thar-lam bang-par'i ther-e skad. The Vinaya text, 1979. Rs. 15.00
10. The Akshara Puraksa of Acarya Dipnaga by Nalayana Shastri, 1980. Rs. 50.00
11. ASPECTS OF BUDDHISM. Silver Jubilee Commemoration Volume, 1981. Rs. 150.00
16. RINCHEN TERZOD CATALOGUE, Nyenmapa Catalogue series, Vol. I. & II. 1996 (Per. vol.) Rs. 250.00
17. YAR-SRYAS-GRAM, Gelugpa Catalogue Series, Vol. I. 1996. Rs. 100.00
   (Hard Bound) Rs. 75.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 250.00
21. Richardson, Helen, Tibetan Medicine, 1993
   (Paperback) Rs. 450.00
22. Aspects of Classical Tibetan Medicine, Special Volume of Bulletin, 1993
   (Paperback) Rs. 245.00
23. Kadam Buchro, Part I, II and III
   (Paperback) Rs. 150.00
24. Kadam Buchro, Part I
   (Paperback) Rs. 125.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 225.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 450.00
27. Embodiment of H.H. The XVth Dalai Lama, 1980
   (Paperback) Rs. 250.00
28. Thugs Shri, 1985
   (Paperback) Rs. 150.00
29. Gyalpo, Dzogchen, 1986
   (Paperback) Rs. 50.00
30. Bulletin of Tibetology (Seminar Volumes) 1995
   (Paperback) Rs. 50.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 40.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 40.00
33. Bulletin of Tibetology, 1997 onwards (Per copy)
   (Paperback) Rs. 40.00
34. Bibliography of the Tibetan Physician (Symposium VII) 1996 & 97 (Per copy)
   (Paperback) Rs. 40.00
35. Gangdug Chaggyur, Pema Drukpa (Set of 5) (Per set)
   (Paperback) Rs. 20.00
   (Paperback) Rs. 725.00